SCANNING RIVERINE HERALD NEGATIVES

The history of Echuca in the past five decades is being revealed shot-by-shot to a team of volunteers at our Museum.

The volunteers are scanning their way through thousands of photo negatives taken by Riverine Herald photographers and journalists since the 1960s. The historical society's project will see the photos archived onto computers and, ultimately, discs at the museum.

Volunteers work on a roster at the back of the museum in a little wooden hut which, in 1914, was the Crumpler Lane home of Swiss migrant Charles Eberle.

Funding from the Echuca Workers' and Services Club the Public Records Office of Victoria and CVGT Employment and Training has made this project possible

The volunteers' efforts are greatly appreciated and the society would be happy to hear from anyone else interested in helping with the project, no experience is necessary, with training provided.

Scanners: Volunteers Margaret Smith (seated) and Andriene Birch are helping to archive negatives from the Riverine Herald for Echuca Historical Society

Community Heritage Grants 2010

Echuca Historical Society is thrilled to have received this award. Along with the certificate, EHS has received $5225 to conduct a significant assessment of the collection.

200 applications for grants from organisations throughout Australia were received, 70 were selected, with 36 organisations chosen to attend a 3 day workshop.

Margaret Hart attended the workshop in Canberra and accepted the certificate on behalf of EHS from Mr Richard Eccles of the Dept of Prime Minister and Cabinet.

The workshops were held at the National Library, the National Archives and the National Museum of Australia.

The Acting Director General of the National Library, Mr Warwick Cathro, welcomed all participants to the Canberra. These grants are a reminder that if we don't preserve our history now it could be lost forever, he said.
